Synopsis:	Team-created carnival games that allowed people to experience what it feels like to have a learning disability.
Text:	This team used personal experiences and thorough research to design and create elaborate carnival games that illustrate the difficulties children with ADHD and Dyslexia experience as learners. The games were designed to enable people to visually and perceptually experience what it feels like to have a learning disability. Two versions of the games were played side by side to help visually represent the contrast between able learners and students that require more processing time. Additionally, the games helped to create a powerful sense of the emotional impact of having a learning disability. The team intentionally incorporated their own thoughts and emotional responses to communicate the experience of having a learning disability.
